ABSTRACT

The technical assistance guide is divided into three categories: United States government, private sector, and civic organizations. The organizations listed in this guide provide technical assistance to help communities across the country reduce substance abuse through prevention, treatment, law enforcement, and economic development strategies. The section on U.S. government resources lists 39 public organizations and agencies that provide technical assistance to help fight substance abuse and other problems. These include the Safe and Drug Free Schools Program of the Office of Elementary and Secondary Education of the U.S. Department of Education. In the private sector, 23 agencies are listed that are not funded by the government. The section on civic organizations lists 13 community organizations that do not have substance abuse as their primary mission, but do support initiatives that often go hand in hand with those of substance abuse prevention groups. Many of these initiatives are educational in nature. A "Request for Services" form is included to assist communities in identifying their needs when asking for technical assistance. (SLD)

Dear Colleague:

Join Together is pleased to offer this Technical Assistance Resource Guide to help communities across the country reduce substance abuse, the most important public health problem in the nation. Four years ago, we jointly convened quarterly meetings with the Center for Substance Abuse Prevention and other federal agencies and national organizations in the hopes that they would encourage communication, coordination and collaboration among the leading federal agencies, foundations and organizations in the area of substance abuse. We did this because community leaders throughout the nation told us that the lack of coordination, cooperation and common policy direction among the federal agencies and other national organizations hinders their success and wastes billions of dollars.

It is clear to all of us that substance abuse is a major factor in many of the domestic problems that face the nation today. Therefore, we find it very encouraging that the representatives who attend these meetings plan to continue to meet and that community groups who use the resources offered in this guide join together with more partners as they develop and implement a strategy to reduce the harms from substance abuse.

The public private partnerships that are informally being formed by this national working group and mirrored in regional and local groups are key to success in effectively working to reduce the harms from alcohol and drugs throughout the country.

It is our hope that this resource guide will begin to help you understand who provides technical assistance and what type of assistance each organization offers. All national technical assistance providers are welcome to be included in the next edition of this guide. We look forward to cooperating with you in any way we can in the substance abuse arena. For more information, contact Join Together at (617) 437-1500 or via email at "info a jointogether.org

Sincerely,

Roberta Garson Leis
Technical Assistance Director

Introduction to the Technical Assistance Guide

This Technical Assistance Guide is a second edition of information on public, private and civic organizations available to assist you with prevention, treatment, law enforcement, and economic development strategies in your communities. The resources listed can help individuals and communities to collaborate, and to develop new alliances and find creative solutions to address substance abuse and its associated problems.

The Join Together Technical Assistance Guide is designed to help you navigate through the maze of national resources available to strengthen community-wide strategies targeting substance abuse.

Technical Assistance can be provided by telephone, on-site, on-line, by private and peer to peer consultation, and by written material and training.

Obtaining Technical Assistance

Use this guide to help determine the type of assistance you need. Once you have located the provider or entity that seems appropriate to help you, question their experience in working with communities whose demographics and goals are similar to yours. Remember, it is just as important that technical assistance build upon your strengths as it is to address weaknesses.

Preparation is important before requesting technical assistance. Begin with your goals in mind. Here are some questions to consider:

- What are your objectives?
- What is the timeline?
- What is the process for requesting technical assistance? Is there any cost ?
- Do you have any input in determining who will fill your request?
- What tasks or obligations are required of the recipient?

Some points to discuss when requesting technical assistance:

- Your target population (age, economic status, education status, employment, size, etc.)
- Your total community (city or county demographics, major employers, number of school districts, etc.)
- Your technical assistance priorities, three is a good number
- Partners or allies
- Your funding source(s)
- Major resources in your community - private and public sector
- Barriers to your success - private and public sector

CONTENTS

This Technical Assistance Guide is divided into the following three categories:

- UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT.....7
  These are public organizations and agencies whose mission is to provide technical assistance to groups to help them fight substance abuse and other problems.

- PRIVATE SECTOR.....23
  These are private agencies that are not funded by the government that provide technical assistance on a variety of topics related to substance abuse.

- CIVIC ORGANIZATIONS.....31
  These are organizations that don't really have substance abuse as their primary mission but whose efforts often go hand in hand with those of substance abuse groups.

Services: The National Crime Prevention Council (NCPC) is a private, non-profit organization that produces educational publications, broadcasts public service advertising in the media, and conducts training and demonstration programs involving municipal government, community-based organizations, and youth in the fields of crime, drug, and violence prevention. Many of these publications can provide municipal leaders with case studies of what other cities and towns are doing to prevent crime and violence. NCPC also manages the work of the National Crime Prevention Coalition of America. The Coalition is a group of 136 national and state organizations and federal agencies that lead the collective efforts of individuals, communities, and governments to improve the quality of life by preventing crime. It also manages the work of the McGruff "Take A Bite Out Of Crime" public service advertising campaign substantially funded by the U.S. Department of Justice. Often with the assistance of its corporate and government partners, NCPC publishes case studies and other books, videos, kits of camera-ready reproducible program materials, posters, brochures, and information and policy reports on a broad range of crime prevention, youth development, and community-building subjects.

It also publishes the Catalyst newsletter, distributed to over 16,000 readers interested in the issues of prevention. These materials target all age groups, and some are multilingual.

ABOUT JOIN TOGETHER

Join Together is a national resource center for communities fighting substance abuse and gun violence.

Join Together initiatives include:

- Award-winning websites. Join Together Online (www.jointogether.org) connects people across the country electronically to share successful strategies and provides the latest information on substance abuse and gun violence prevention. The Quitnet (www.quitnet.org) gives smokers and tobacco control professionals access to interactive quitting tools, peer-to-peer support, news and information.

- Public policy panels to help communities identify and overcome policy barriers that hamper their ability to reduce substance abuse.

- A communications strategy to keep the issue of substance abuse on the national agenda, and to help local groups articulate the link between substance abuse and other social problems in their communities.

- Technical assistance to answer questions from community groups as they develop a comprehensive strategy to address substance abuse and gun violence.

- National surveys which describe and quantify the community movement against substance abuse.

- National Leadership Fellows Program to recognize outstanding community leaders and provide them with training opportunities to enhance their leadership skills and knowledge about substance abuse.

- National Program Office for Fighting Back, 14 communities which have comprehensive strategies to reduce substance abuse and the related harms.

Join Together is primarily funded by The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation through a grant to the Boston University School of Public Health. The gun violence prevention website is supported by funds from the Joyce Foundation.
